

Study Place Writing Assignments

Define the term "study place":

Write one or two sentences in which you give the meaning of this term and include enough detail to show that you really understand it.

Describe your study place:

Write about your study place, including vivid "showing" details, so that your reader can easily picture this place. Help your reader see exactly what it looks like and hear any noises or activity within the space.

Evaluate your study place:

Write about your study place, so that your reader can easily understand the good and bad points or strengths and weaknesses of this location for effectively reading, studying, and completing homework assignments.

Analyze the sources of distraction in your study place:

Write about your regular study place, so that your reader can clearly imagine each of the different distractions that can make it difficult for you to concentrate and complete your homework in this location.

Compare studying in two different places:

Try doing your homework for a few days in a different location than your usual study place. Then write about the similarities and differences between the two places.

Justify your selection of a regular study place:

Give good, convincing reasons to support your decision to 1) continue using your regular study place as it is; 2) stay in the same study place but make some necessary changes; or 3) use a different study place.
